Continuation of Substance of Interview including description of the general nature of what was agreed to if an agreement was reached, or any other comments: Applicant has proposed an amendment after Final Rejection adding further limitations to the claims, including a limitation of the locking portions being slidable. The examiner noted that such a change would very likely not be entered after Final Rejection in that it constitutes a non-trivial change in scope, and one for which no previous prosecution history is clearly provided. The examiner noted that Seydel teaches lock elements which may be positioned at different locations (compare alternate embodiments shown in figs. 1A and 5), as such Seydel anticipates the location of the locks in different locations on the spine, which may serve as an implicit teaching that at least repositioning, if not movability, of the locks is desireable. Applicant further stressed that Seydel teaches lock elements which are shorter than a length of a basket to be positioned adjacent the cart (so as to fit over the edge of a basket without interfering with the corners) and continued, noting that the lock portions of the inventive cart were also intended to be shorter than the wall of a basket to be positioned adjacent the locks of the inventive cart. Some further discussion continued with the examiner noting that Seydel's drawings were not scaled, and as such, as assertion as to a particular angle involved in placing the baskets on the cart or a relative length of the lock portion with respect to an intended basket to be used with the invention may not be helpful in patentably defining over the prior art. The examiner additionally noted that continued presentation of broad claims, when met with continued prior art rejections, may give an indication that a more narrow claim is required to define beyond the prior art .
